How you can invite a third participant into a session on your mobile phone feature goes live on Wednesday, 10/29

These slides will show you how to invite third parties into a call when prompted by the Jeenie client. The left side of each slide will provide a written description, the right side an image of the mobile screen as you'll see it during that step.

First we will describe the process if a client gives you a phone number to call, then if you need to use a number to text or share a link.

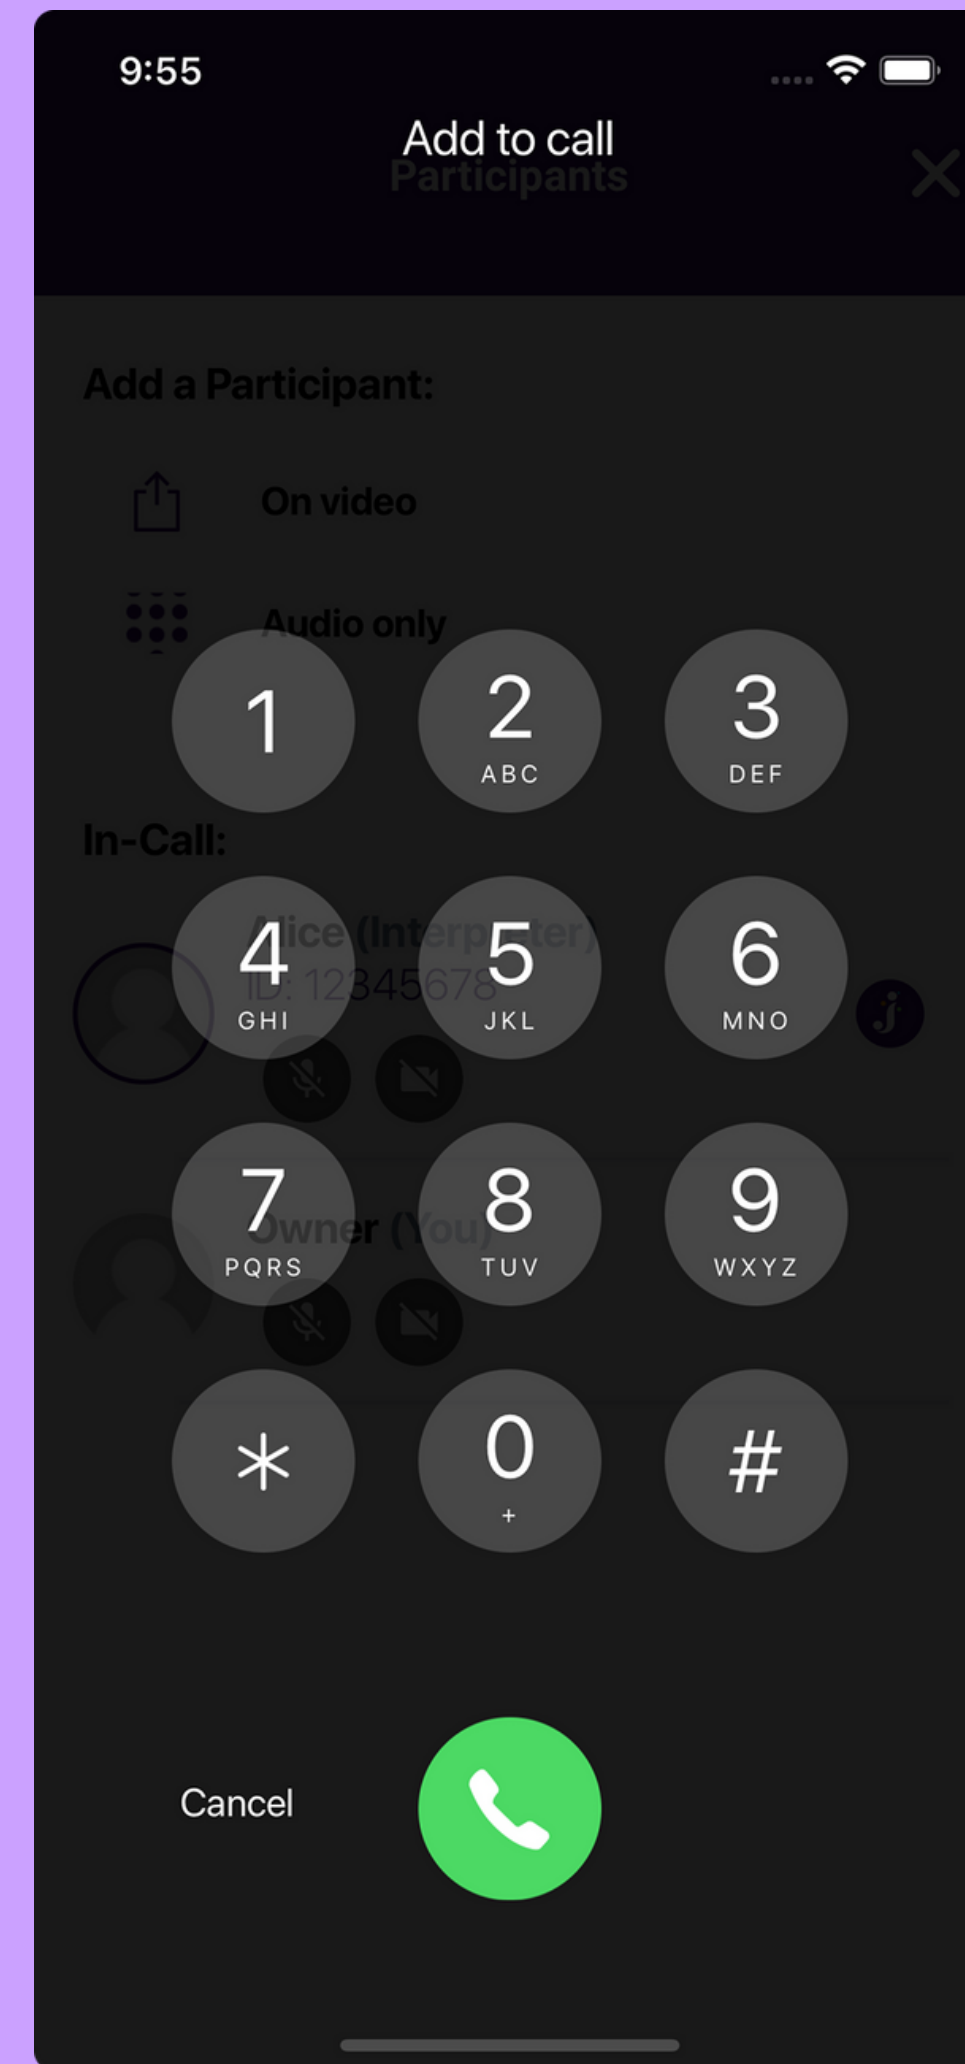

{over here you will see an image of the phone accompanying the description on the left}

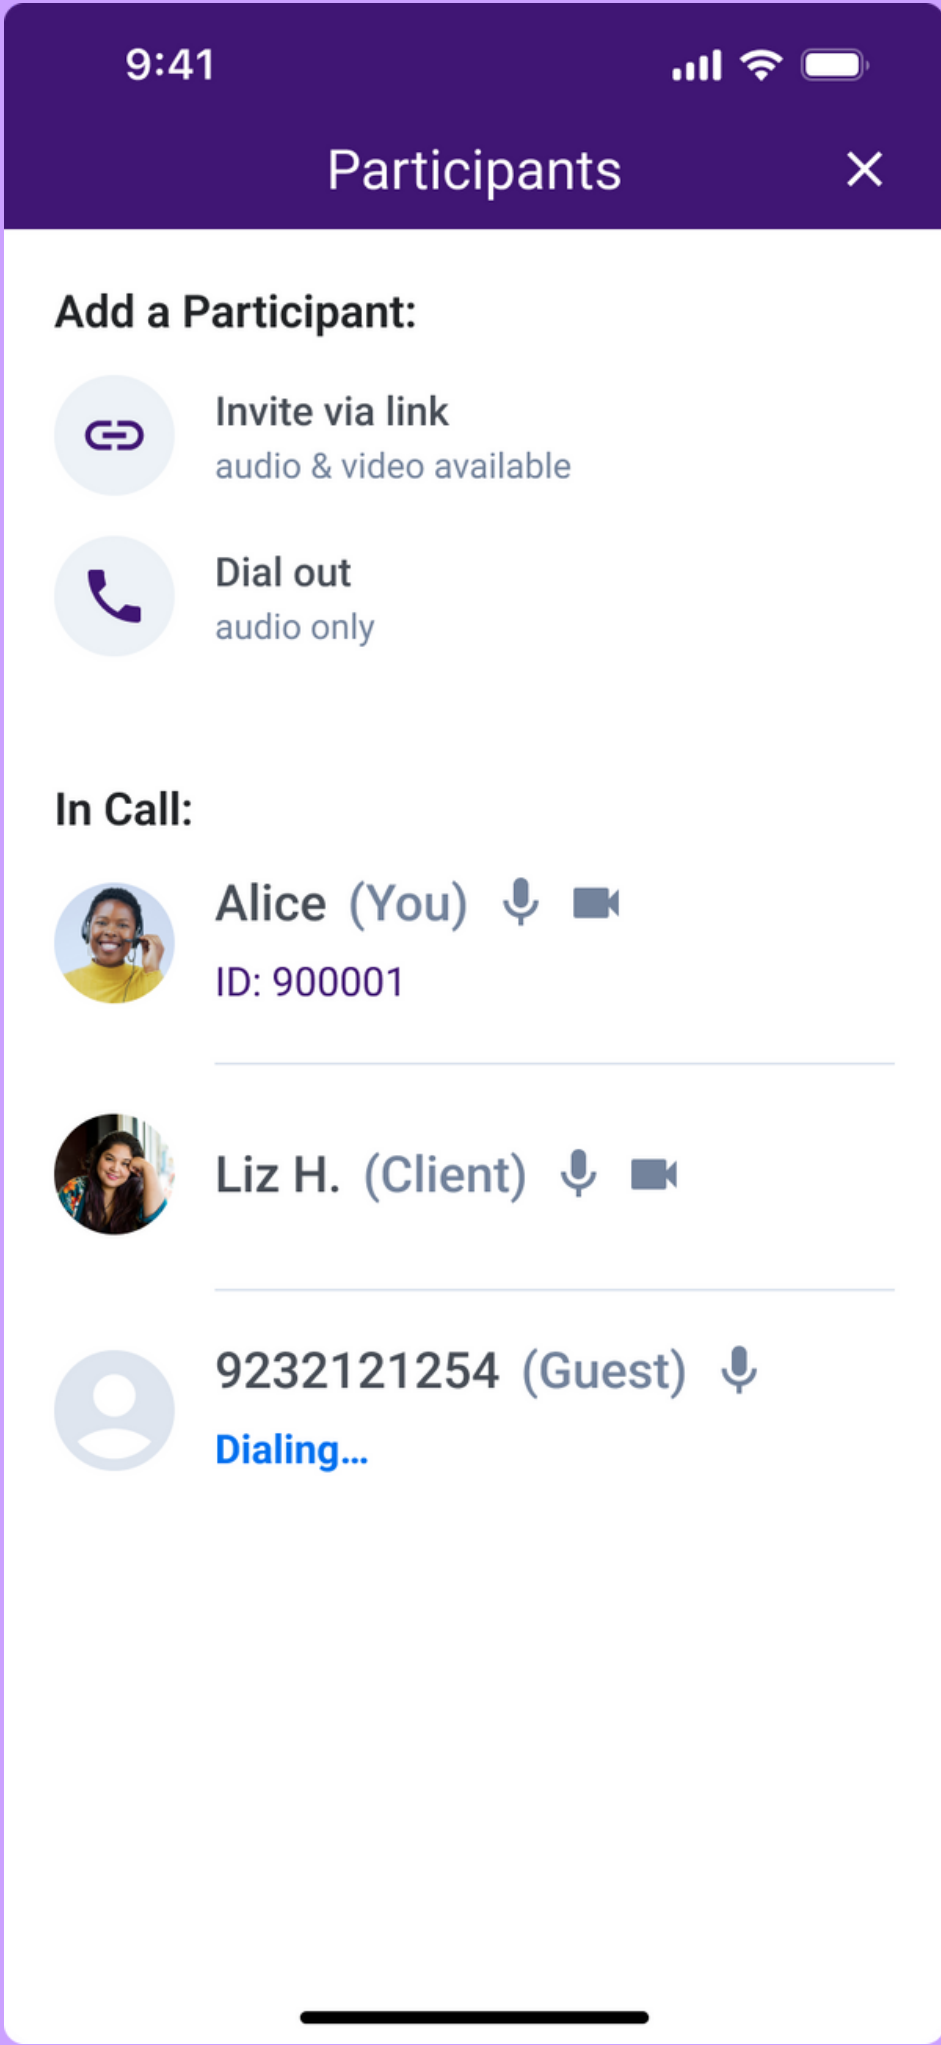

As you can see from the mobile screen on the right, this call begins with two participants. You are the linguist. The client asks you to invite another person into the call via a telephone number. You begin by selecting the “Dial out” button.

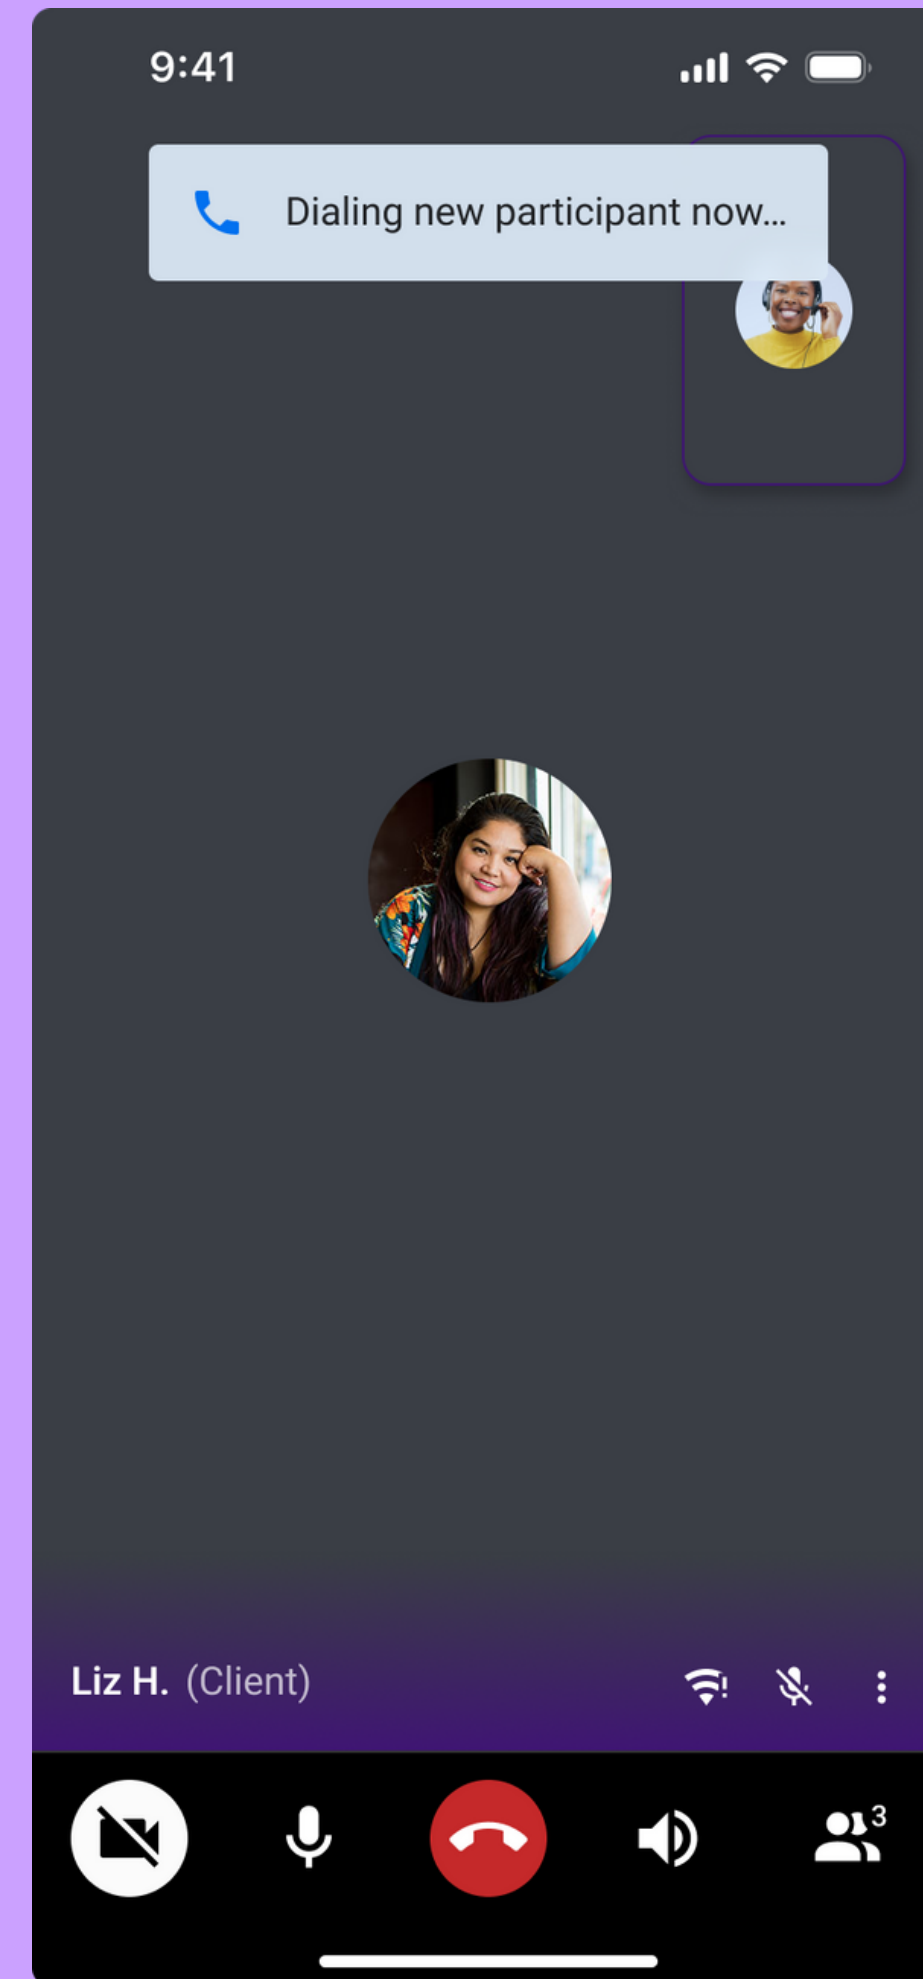

The dial pad appears, at which point you can input in the number provided by the Jeenie client.

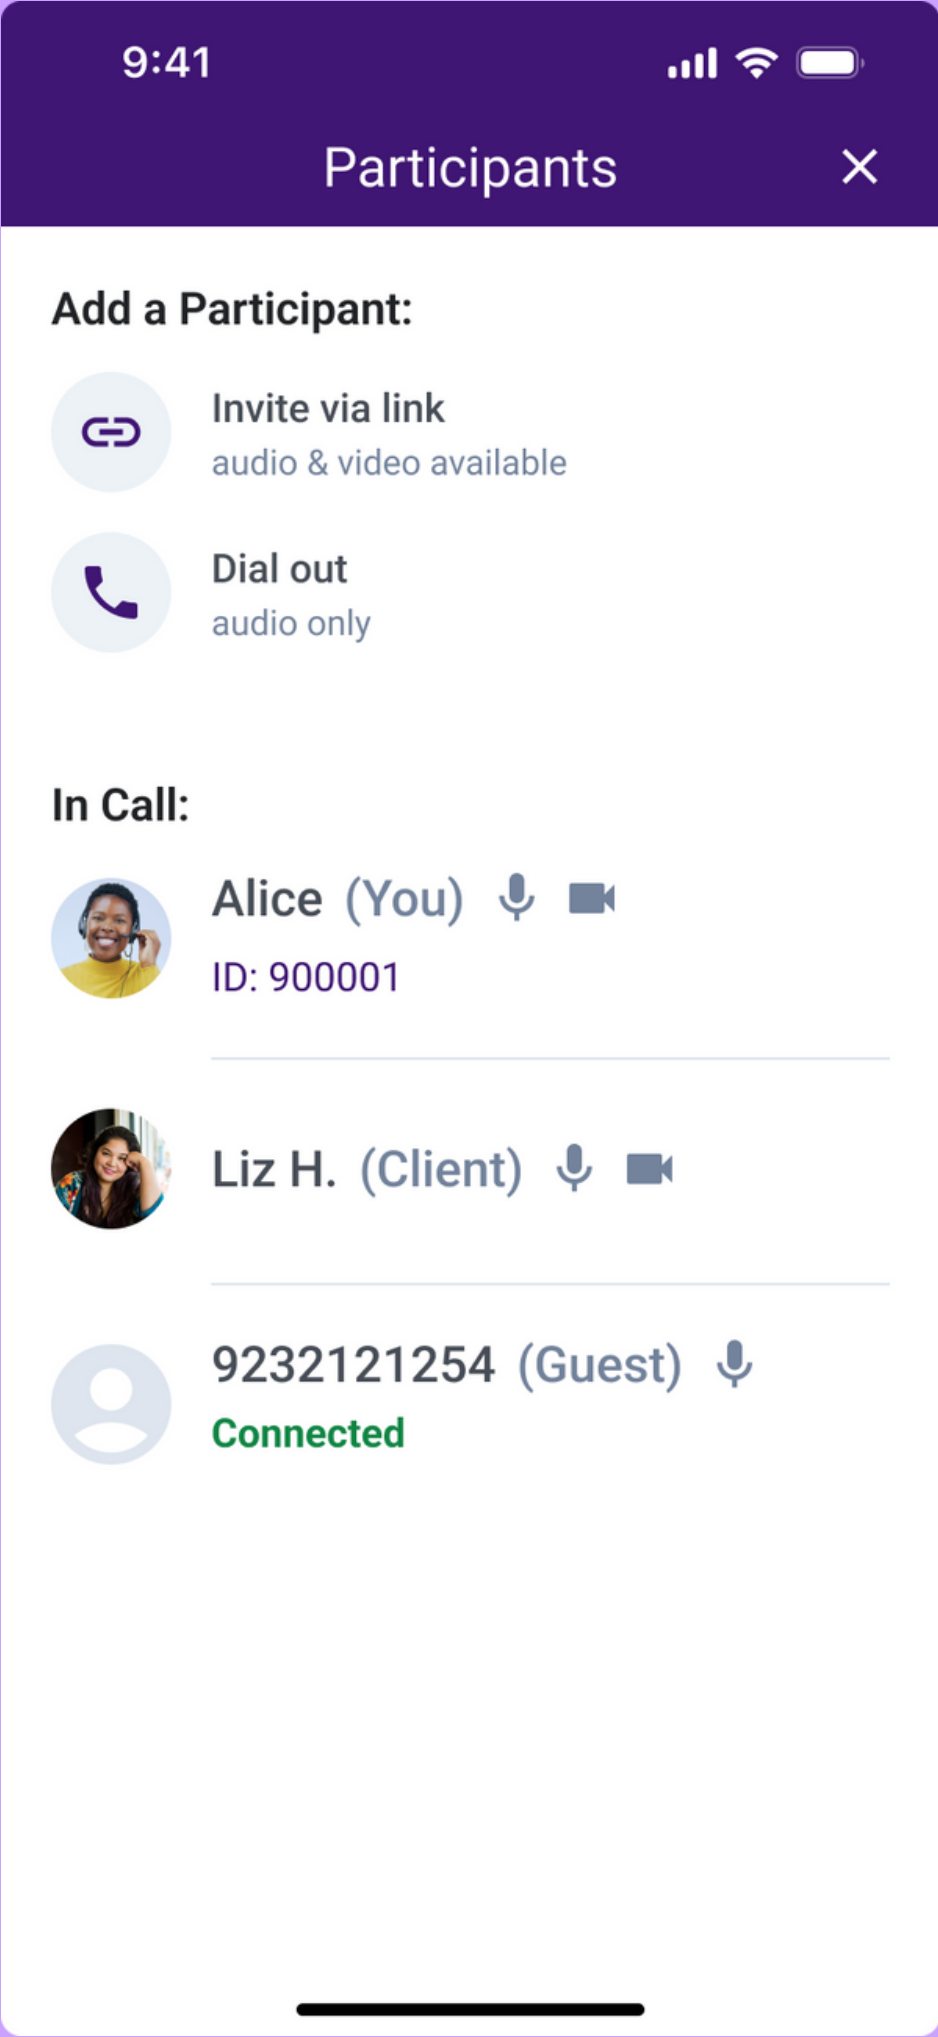

Dial-out begins, shown here in the participants list with the addition of a new “Guest” participant.

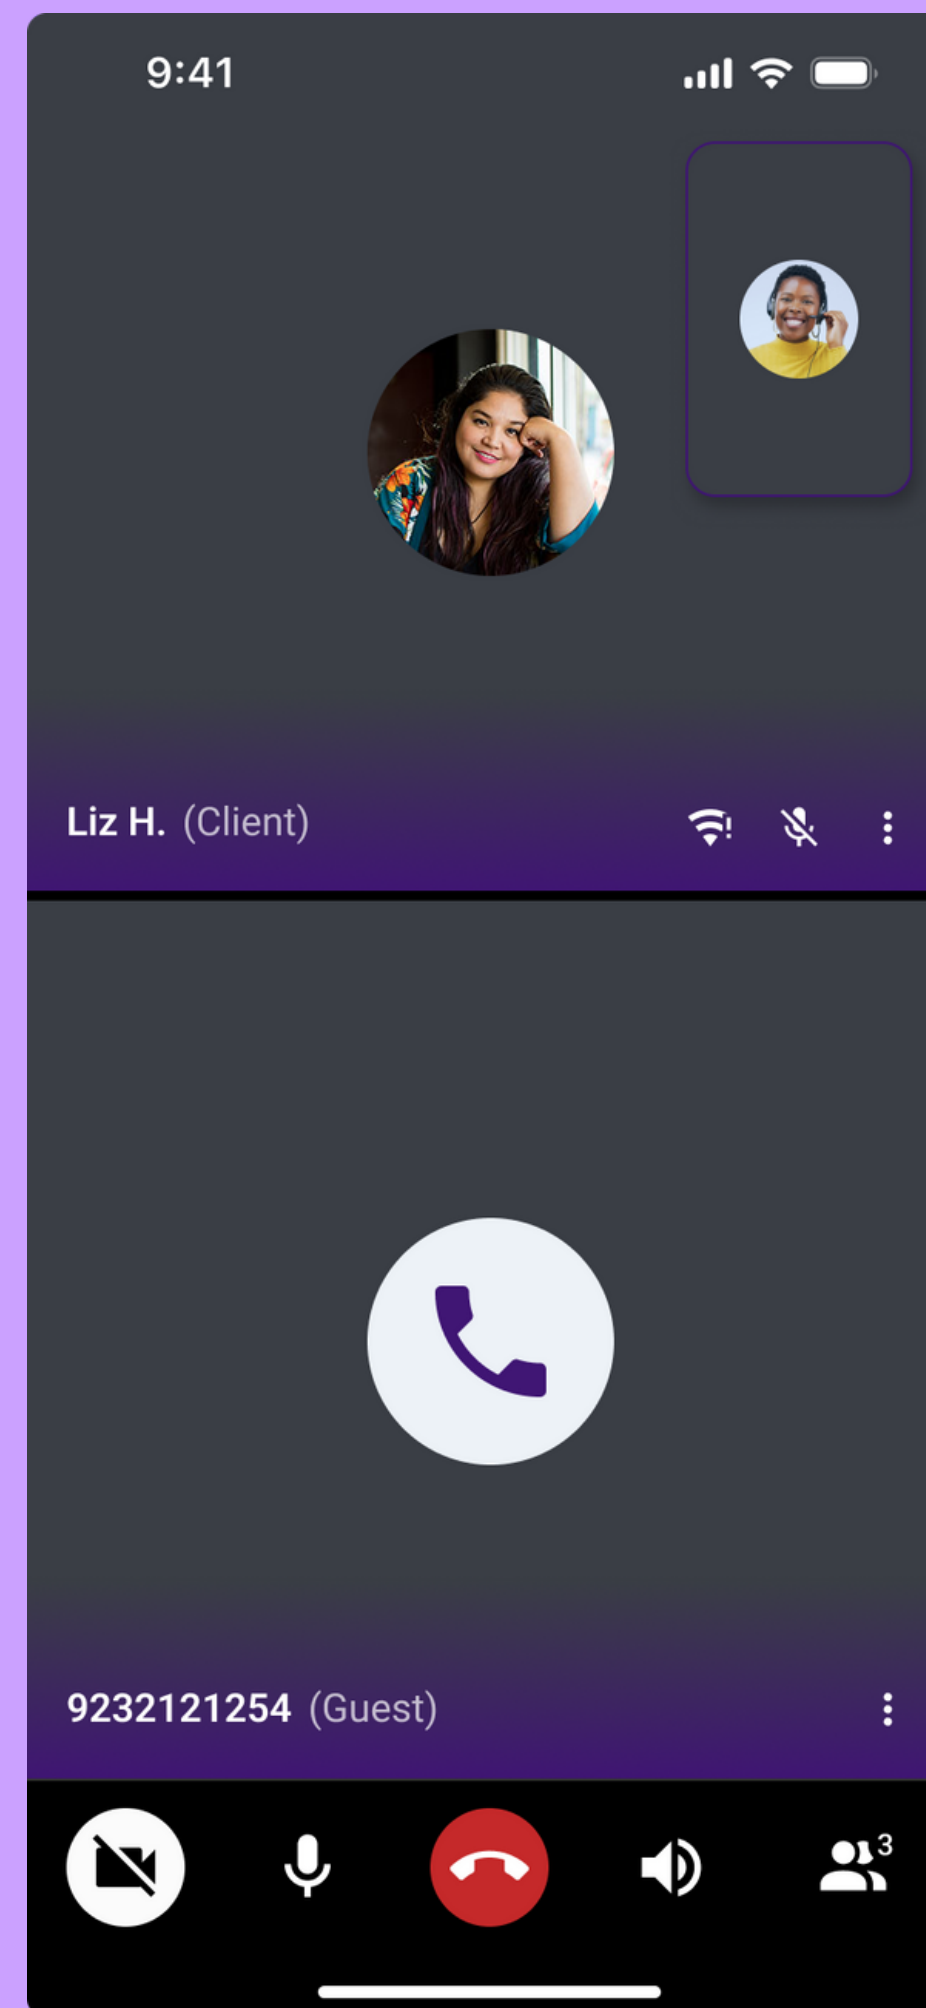

In the session with the client, you can see that the new participant is being dialed-out to via the “dialing” notification at the top of the screen.

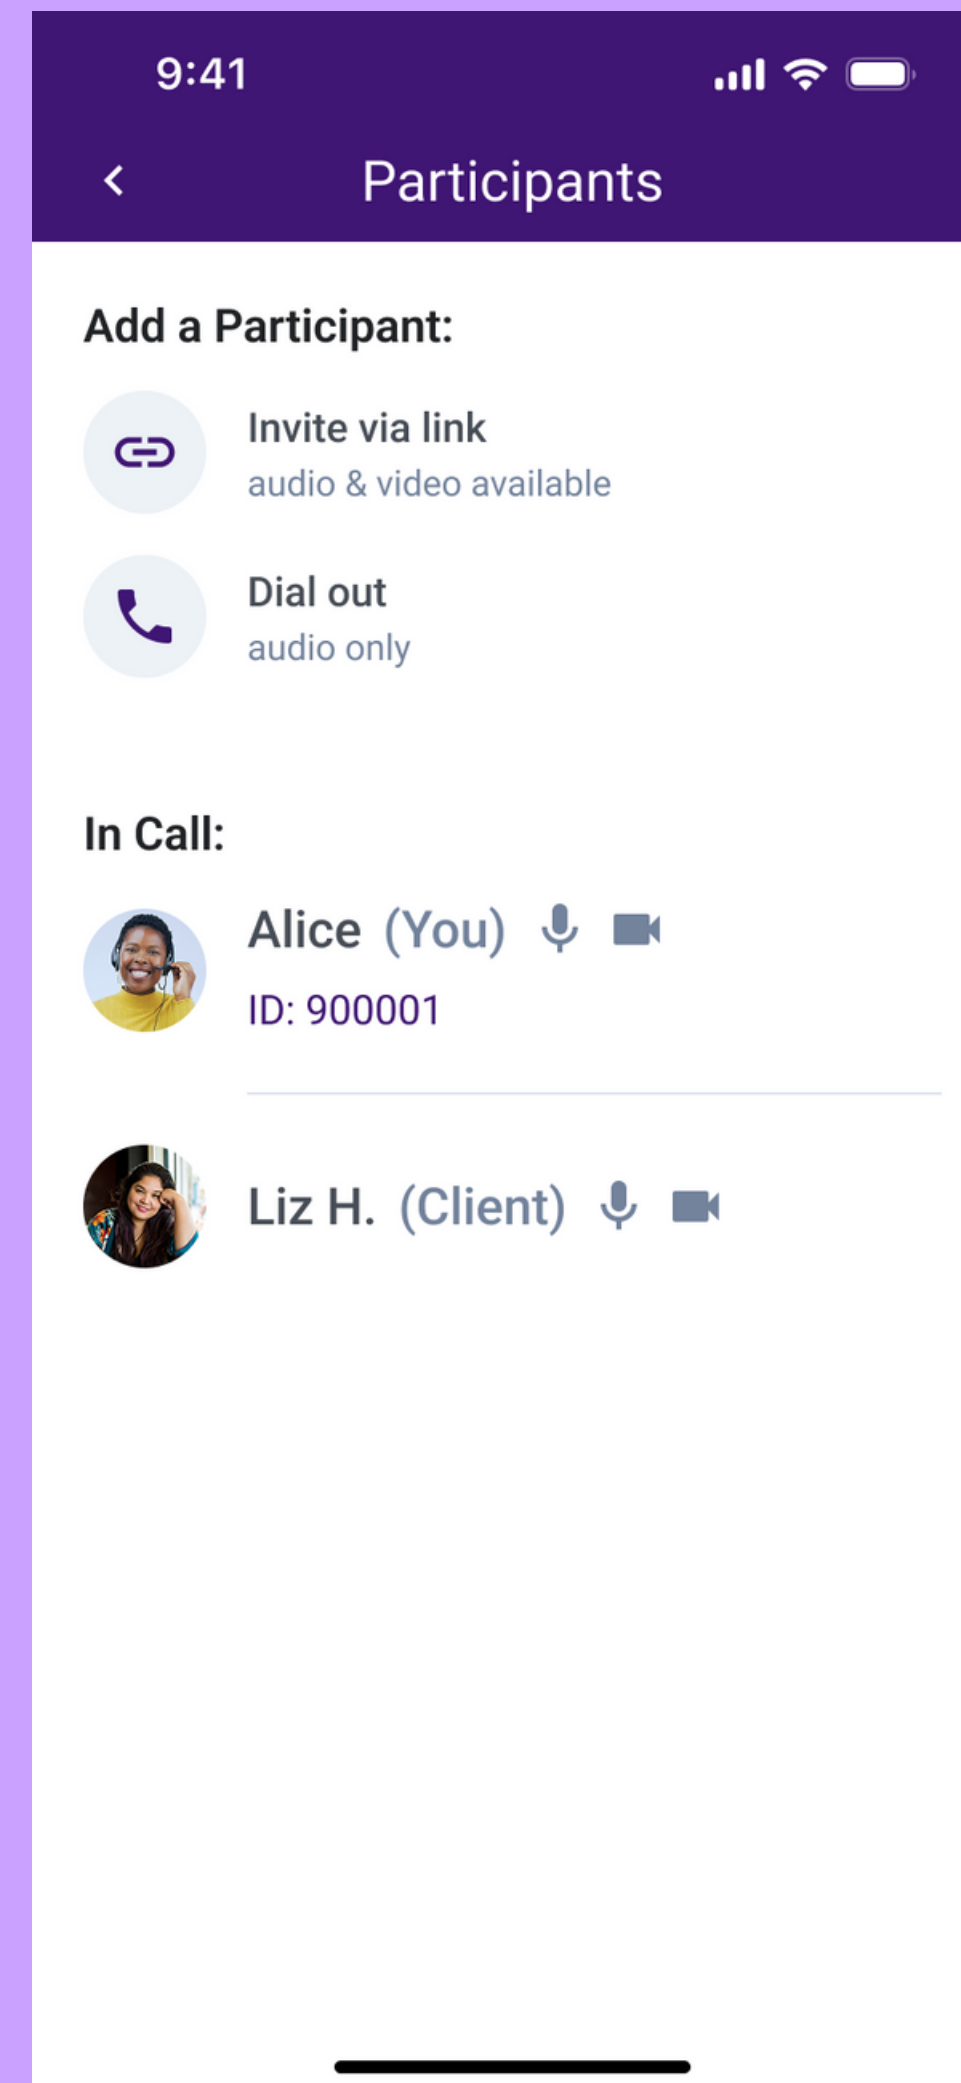

The new participant has now connected successfully. You can see their number in the participants list.

In the session with the client, you can now see an additional box for the new participant once that third party has connected to the call.

If the client requests that you invite someone to join via SMS, or they want you to share a link to join with some third party, select the “Invite via link” button at the top of this screen.

Clicking on that top button will bring you to this screen.

To share the link, tap the Share Link button to activate your device's sharing function (iOS shown here). Then choose the app or service for sharing and continue from there to share the link.

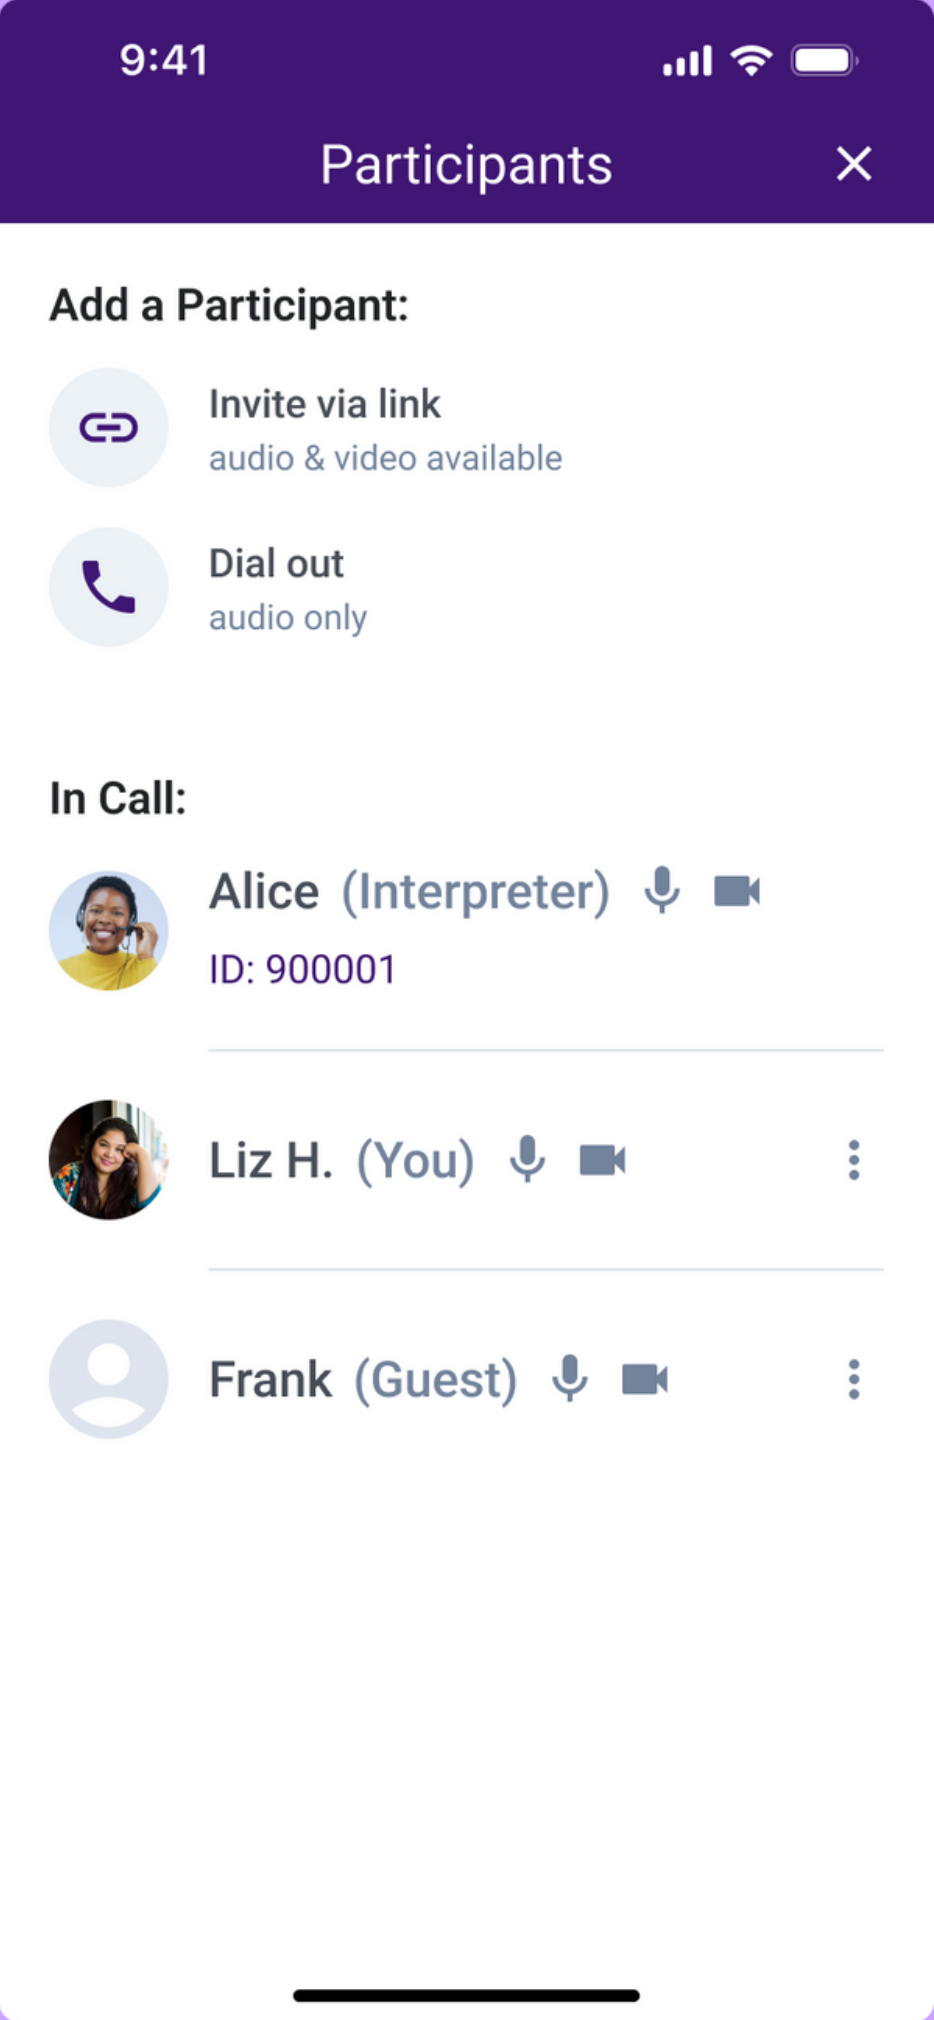

Once sharing is completed, you receive a success notification at the top of the in-call screen.

The newly invited participant should soon join the call.

The new participant also now appears in the participant list.
